

To Madame Julie Fiot
The Reply of the Messenger Bird

Edward Young

Augusta Browne

Voice

Piano

4

I've come, I've come from the spi - rits' land, And a

8

treas - ured song is mine; I bear for the wound - ed heart a balm, And a joy for those that pine. The friends that ye bade on 15

11

earth "good-bye," With cheeks so pale and wan. — They are there in the light of a cloud-less sky, They are there in the light of a cloud - less sky, And their all of grief is done.

19

23

f

28

The chief-tain that left his bow un - strung; The sage with his locks of snow; ——— And the 32

maid whose voice like the night - birds rung, In its plain - tive - ness of woe; ——— And the youth with the laugh-ing eye is there; And the mo-ther who left her babe. — Swing-ing to and fro in the sum - mer air, Swing-ing to and fro in the sum - mer air, Be - neath the sy - ca-more's

36

41

3

They sit on the banks where the bright flowers gleam,
 And they dream not of toil or pain;
 For they've drank of the fount with the golden stream;
 They have drank — and are young again.
 And they bade me speed with my glittering wing,
 From the realm of the nightless day,
 To the dim old groves where they loved to sing,
 And thus to the mourning say:

4

We tune our harps by the bright blue streams,
 That lave on a gem-clad shore;
 And our lives are as sweet as an infant's dreams,
 And we sigh not, nor weep we more.
 We watch ye friends, when the night-winds breath
 Lies hushed over moor and hill;
 For love extends past the bourne of death —
 We have loved, and we love ye still.

5

We are there unseen, by the home fire's blaze,
 As our tales ye repeat again,
 When ye sing the song of other days —
 We are there, and we bless ye then.
 And we hover o'er when the hour of prayer Comes on, at the close of even —
 Midst the hallowed family band, we're there,
 And we bear those prayers to heaven.